Only One Mother.
You have only one mother, my boy,
Whose heart is filled with gladness with Grief is to her.
Till ready to break:
So cheerful that mother, my boy.
You have one mother who will
Stick to you through good and through ill,
The world is your home.
The world is your love.
So care for that love ever still.
You have only one mother to pray
That in the good path you may stay;
Who for you won't spare
Sole sacrifice rare.
So worth it is the mother's love.

You have only one mother to make
A home ever sweet for your sake.
Wishes kill day and night.
For you with delight.
To help her all pains take.
You have only one mother to miss
When she has lost you from this
Love and revere.
That mother while here:
Sometimes you won't know her dear kind.
You have only one mother, just one;
Remember that always, my son;
None can or will do
What a woman for her ever does.

THE COWARD'S DEATH.

The Viscount, in society, called "The Scoundrel," was a scoundrel. His name was George Lame, and he was a scoundrel, and the possessor of a scoundrel's fortune. He had a scoundrel's face, and a scoundrel's heart; he made people shrink him with cleverness, a certain natural grace, an air of mobility and pride, a gallant, amorous, and a gentle eyes—a thing which pleased him.

In the drawing room he was in great request, much more so than his partner for the waltz; and he inspired among men that desire for a scoundrel's life to go to the end, because he had his wits fully fixed to fight not to tremble. He was still thirty. He got up again to drink. Then an axeman seized him.

"Why did you come to boasting so madly about your well known robes of his chivalry?" When the clock was about to strike the little grinding sound of the spring, which stabs erect caused him to give a start; and for several seconds after that he was obliged to open his mouth to breathe, he remained speechless.

He set himself to reasoning with himself upon the possibility of this thing:

"Shall I be afraid?"

"No, certainly not; he would not be afraid."

"I must go to see him, to the end, because he had his wits fully fixed to fight not to tremble. He was still thirty. He got up again to drink. Then an axeman seized him.

"There is a man who is looking me out of countenance: I do not know him, do you?"

The husband, who had seen nothing, raised his eye, but declared:

"No, not at all."

The young lady continued, half smiling, half vexed:

"It is very unpleasant, that man is spoiling my ice."

Her husband shrugged his shoulders:

"I shall not pay any attention to it. If we had not thought ourselves about every instant, that we met we should never have done."

But the Viscount had risen brusquely. He could not allow that this stranger should spoil an ice which he had offered. It was not him that this insult was addressed, because it was through him and on his account that his friends had entered the cafe. So the master concerned him only.

He advanced toward the man and said to him:

"I have seen a manner of looking at those ladies, which I cannot tolerate. I beg of you to be so kind as to cease from this insistence."

The other answered:

"You are going to mind your own business, I suppose."

The viscount said, with close-pressed teeth:

"Take care, sir, you will force me to pass bounds."

The gentleman answered but one word, a foul word, which rang from one end of the cafe to the other, and in a spring, came to every group, to execute a mild punishment. All those whisks began to turn whizzed around; all the others raised their heads; three waiters pivoted upon their heels like tops; the two ladies at the desk gave a snap round their whole bodies from the waist; and the two自动 mata obedient to the sun crumpled.

A great silence made itself felt. Then, on a sudden, a dry sound cracked in the air. The viscount slapped his adversary's face, and the cards exchanged between the two.

When the viscount had reached home, he paced his room for several minutes with great, quick strides. He was too much agitated, in his mind, to have any notion of any sort. He had done that which he ought to have done; he had shown himself to be that which he ought to be. People would talk about it, they would blame him, they would congratulate him. He recited, in a loud voice, speaking as one speaks when one's thoughts are very much troubled:

"What a brute the fellow was!"

Then he lay down and tried to sleep. He must find some way to think of nothing. Whom should he choose? He thought over those men of his acquaintance who had the best positions. They were the most celebrated. He finally selected the Marquis de la Tour-Nouvel, a tall, thin, pale, a nobleman and a soldier. Very good indeed. Their names would sound in the papers. He perceived that he was thirsty, and he drank once after another, three glasses of water, then he began to walk up and down the room. He fell asleep, fell into a dream. If he blustered a little, if he showed himself to be at all points, if he demanded rigorous and dangerous conditions, if he insisted on a sum, very high, very terrible, his opponent would probably withdraw and make apologize.

He picked up the card which he had pulled out of his pocket and thrown on the table. The viscount was in a single glance. He had already done to the cafe and in the cab, by the glimmer of every street lamp on his way home. "George Lame, 51 Rue Money." Nothing more.

He examined those assembled letters with interest, his mysterious and full of a confused meaning. "Lame, 51 Rue Money. Who was this man? What had he been about? Why had he stared at that woman in that way? Was it not revolting that a woman in such a place should come to trouble your life all on one side? But because he had been pleased to fix his eyes so solemnly upon a woman that you know? And the viscount repeated yet again, in a long voice:

"What a brute he was!"

Then he remained motionless, upright thinking, his look overplanted on the card. A rage awoke in him against this piece of paper, an anger full of hate, in which was mixed a strange, uneasy feeling. It was stupid, this whole affair! He was a little foolish indeed as to his hasty and precipitate into the middle of the painful name, as if he had poniarded some one.

However they must fight. He considered himself indeed as the inferior party. And the sword or the pistol should decide the pistol or the sword? With the sword he risked less; but with the pistol he had the chance of making his adversary win.

It is a very wise and sound rule of prudence, mutual prudence preventing the combatants from engaging near enough for the point of the rapier to enter very deep.

With the pistol, however, he hit first, but he might easily come out of the affair with all the houses of the situation, and without going so far as an actual meeting.

He said:

"I shall be firm. He will be afraid!"

The sound of his voice made him tremble, and he looked about him. He felt himself very nervous. He drank another glass of water, then began to undress himself to go to bed.

As soon as he was in bed he blew out the light and shut his eyes.

He thought:

"Two got all day tomorrow to attend to affairs. I'll better sleep first so as to be calm."

He was very warm under the bedclothes but he could not sleep off. He turned and twisted, remained five minutes on his back, then placed his feet on his left side, and turned to his right.

He was still thirty. He got up again to drink. Then an axeman seized him.

"I am a man fit to be hanged. His sword having in the end his own down before the table to write some letters. After tracing at the top of them, "This is my will," he got up again to drink. He was still thirty. He got up again to drink. Then an axeman seized him.

"I could no longer escape that, of course, I was going to fight a duel. He got up again to drink. He was still thirty. He got up again to drink. Then an axeman seized him.

"And so he was going to fight a duel. He got up again to drink. He was still thirty. He got up again to drink. Then an axeman seized him.

"I could no longer escape that, of course, I was going to fight a duel. He got up again to drink. He was still thirty. He got up again to drink. Then an axeman seized him.

THE BULL FIGHT OF TODAY

AN EYE WITNESS DESCRIBES MEXICO'S NATIONAL SPORT.

Six Bulls and Ten Horses on an Average Are killed at Each Fight, Which Takes Place on Sundays—An Interesting Sketch of the Encounter From Start to Finish.

Mrs. J. H. Horway, of the Dominion Bank, Toronto, lately made a trip through Mexico and furnished some graphic account of a bull fight witnessed at Saltillo, and Messing T. M. Scott, of the same institution: nothing more interesting than the study of human nature. To become acquainted with the character and propensities of mankind with them in their various relations as well as in the more sober affairs of life; and there is no more satisfactory way of forming a correct opinion of the Mexican people than by witnessing their chief national sport—a bull fight.

I had not been in Mexico City before I observed on all sides, and in the most conspicuous places, large posters announcing "Magnifica Corrida de Toros," (unfrightful fight), to be held the following Sunday. Accompanied by my companion de voyage, S. R. and H., I took a carriage at the Hotel del Jardine for the bull ring. A two miles drive through the beautiful Alameda—an avenue of trees, a mile long, of tropical foliage, and historical monuments on either side, with bands at intervals of half a mile discoursing sweet music while mounted guards in brilliant uniform, stationed along the whole route gave a festive appearance to the scene. We arrived at the place where was enacted on every Sunday a grand performance, in its nature the most revolting and demoralizing; it is possible for one to conover his back with graceful elasticity. This tiring goes on for a few minutes, the audience watching its appreciation of the fine play withoutapplause but hissing any appearance of timidity or awkwardness.

BULL AND BANDERILLERO.

At the usual signal the banderilleros are turned to the banderilleros. This new instrument of torture is a piece of wood about two feet long covered with ribbon of paper and provided at one end with a short barbed point. The banderillero with a barb in each hand holds the bull by the horns, the point of the bull and as the beast rushes at him he plants these shafts over the horns into each shoulder. In order to receive the plaudits of the public the matador places both at the stake otherwise he is himself.

There are two banderilleros and each of them have two or three shots at the bull he presents a pitiable spectacle by the time they are through with him. Probably six or eight of these banderilleros are hanging from his neck while blood flows freely from the wounds.

The banderillero's part is a most dangerous one. On that account he rank next to the matador. When the banderillero plants his banderilla creates great enthusiasm, and now covering their semibotes into the ring, the fair sénior and fairer sénioras their fans, all alike feel immensely flattered when the performer, so honored stoops to pick up and then back these articles to their respective owners.

After the bull has been decorated as above described, the bangle is once more sounded and the closing scene in this bloody drama is entered. The poor brute has but a few moments to live, and the present sufferings are to be further increased by the hands of the espadín. This dignitary is handed a sword and red cloak, and with the latter thrown over his shoulder, and sword in hand he descends to the President's box, and dedicating him to the gods.

Now is to be witnessed the most admired and by far the most dangerous part of the performance. The espada engages the attention of the bull by moving the cloak in his face. As the bull charges him the espada gives the horns a sharp blow which strikes over the horns a small spot whereupon the espada gives the spinal cord or plumes his sword into the heart.

Often times three or four strokes are made before one is successful. Finally a vital part is touched when the bull sinks to his knees and falls to the ground. The coup de grâce is at once given by the toroero who rushes up and stabs him in the heart. These men are always brought in and the body is quickly dragged from the ring, the whole audience rising to their feet shouting and waving their hats and handkerchiefs.

I have to confess that next to the horse my sympathy is with the bull. I am sorry for the animal, but I am also sorry for the spectators. Some of the performances are unfortunate enough to have become a victim. I should have had little pity for him. At this bull fight there were six bulls and ten horses killed, which is about the usual amount of bloodshed considered necessary to appear the thirst for which apparently characterizes the Mexican people.

Bernard's Literary Vandals.—"I am a bookish friend with a taste for literature," said my bookish friend with a smile. "What do you think of Saltillo?" asked his hostess when she was in our store where she was last night. She dropped in one morning, and, of course, all were exceedingly anxious to wait upon her. Finally it resolved itself as my duty, and I sold her quite a bill of goods. Her taste, however, did not attract much attention, and she seemed pleased. Just as she was about going out she reached for my pencil and asked me something in French which I did not understand. Seeing that I failed to catch her meaning she looked all around the counters, but apparently did not notice what I was doing. I took a quickie sketch up a volume of one of the very best sets of Scott in the store, bound in tree calf, opened it to the pages, wrote something on it, calmly tore out the leaf, handed it to me, smiled and went out. On looking at the leaf I saw that she had taken a pass to the back of the counter, and that evening when she did it at the cost of ruining one of our best sets of books in the store."

CARBOLIC ACID FOR WEEDS.

Upon a small scale, carbolic acid and sulphuric acids are used killers of excellent merit. It is not practical to go over a whole field with such remedies, but in the yard these things who have used carbolic acid on dampened grass that they found the root rotted to a considerable depth. Plants can be destroyed in this way. Carbolic acids are applied readily to the soil. If the weeds are not too rank, if the earth touches the grass they will kill that too. In the yard and on lawns, the weeds must be removed in some way or the lawns will be dead. The ordinary way is to take a knife, loosen the plantain and pull it up. When the ground is soft much of it may be pulled without going to the trouble of loosening the roots. What thoughts about us are there a little trouble, but it pays to go to the trouble to have things nice.

The vocal organs are strengthened by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Young and old are alike benefited by its use. For the sensitive throat, carbolic acid and eases peculiar to children nothing else is so effective. It is a good remedy for the colds, while its agreeable flavor makes it easy to administer.

"My little boy has large scars on his neck where his tonsils were removed by Ayer's Sarsaparilla. He is a healthy boy now. I expect he would die if he did not take this preparation the most effective for irritation and weakness of the throat and lungs, and for all affections of the vocal organs.

Long before Stanley, Paul de Chaillu discovered the dwarfs in the great forest of equatorial Africa. When his narrative of his adventures was first published, the Royal Geographical Society was inclined to doubt his amazing account of the life of these people. His testimony is now amply confirmed by the experiences of Stanley. De Chaillu has condensed and rewritten his old work entitled "Adventures in the Great Forest of Equatorial Africa and the Country of the Dwarfs," and it will be published early in June by Messrs. Harper & Brothers. The book will contain a map and illustrations.

MOSES HAD ASTHMA.

MY HUSBAND had asthma for eight years with severe cough, and his lungs also were affected. He could neither rest, walk, nor get relief from any medicine tried. Some time ago we got Haygarth's Peppermint Balsom, and after taking six or eight bottles his cough is entirely cured, and his asthma greatly relieved. I have used it on my husband with great success.

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membrane of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proved this to be a fact, and the result of this discovery is that a simple remedy has been formulated whereby entzarr, entzarr deafness and hay fever are permanently cured in from one to three months applications made at home to the patient once in every week.

N.B.—This treatment is not a snuff or an ointment; both have been discarded by reputable physicians as injurious. A pamphlet explaining this new treatment will be sent on receipt of price by the proprietor. DR. J. D. KENDALL, Esq., Indianapolis, Ind.

THE ACCIDENT.

WITHIN a few miles of its terminus the railroad passed through a valley, narrow, but not bare, but of great natural beauty. The hills and crags of the valley were still dotted with the pretty cottages of suburban residents, but the country was not yet so closely settled as to have lost its pictorialness, and, although the houses were nest, they were simple, and the lawns, though kept, were still distinguished by broken or cast-iron statuary. The neighborhood had not yet reached that stage in its development when the lawns were filled with summer flowers, and the trees with fruit; but the occasional enterprisers had published. Not had its occasional churchyard yet lost all sense of rest and peace. Simple gravestones there were, but no monuments. But even death itself took his victim unconsciously, as he passed.

It was here that many years before John Dorsey had made for himself a home, and it was here that he was now about to die.

In an account, I was very alone, and Mr. Tom, the conductor, was alone.

John Dorsey, the conductor of the sleeping-car train, had been the only one hurt. He however, though fatally injured, suffered from no pain and was entirely conscious of his surroundings.

He had indeed started the engine, and had driven the locomotive to the station to form any opinion of the probable results.

His insistence upon this fact annoyed the doctor.

"Dorsey," he said, "you must speak to me. You are too young to die, and we shall see you again."

As soon as could be after the accident

Dorsey had been carried to a neighboring house, and Dr. Irvin had been sent for by the man who had known of the incident, and who had been a friend to the two. This friendship was of earlier date than Dorsey's connection with the railroad, and that seemed to Dorsey's fellow employees like him almost like a secret.

Although Dorsey had always been a man of a good will, he had been a little less so in his earlier years, and this had been due to his inability to make up his mind.

"It may seem strange to you," Dorsey went on shortly, "but the railroad had a greater fascination for me than ever.

I stood above the cars and trains as I had in my boyhood. I almost feared that

Permit my neglect hurt us, but just then.

"At all events I gave it up." Then I regretted, a place as brakeman without much trouble.

"Was that pleasant?" the doctor asked. It was easier to interrupt Dorsey now.

"Yes, to me," he answered, "but all I was glad when I was promoted to conductor."

"Has there been no chance for further promotion in all these years?"

"Oh, yes; but I have never wanted to leave my train. After a long while I applied for the place in the engine room, and was appointed to the engine room.

"I am now a brakeman again," Dorsey announced, "and I am as happy as ever."

"Will it hurt me?" Dorsey replied. "Don't call it that."

"And why should you be the only one to hurt?"

"Yes, I am the only one," Dorsey asked.

"Yes?"

"That is strange," said the doctor.

Then his calmness, which had been so remarkable, disappeared, but only for a moment.

"What caused the accident?" he asked.

"A bad knowledge of the engine,"

"Yes?"

"The doctor replied, and he told of the little slide-slide, which had been almost in time, but not quite, and the engine had run into, with barely enough time to jar the train to length.

"We see," he said, "you must have been shaken between two cars in some way."

"Will it hurt me?"

"No," the doctor answered.

"And my brain is perfectly clear?"

"Certainly," the doctor replied, wondering a little.

"Then let me go," he said.

"Yes," the doctor replied, and he told of the little slide-slide, which had been almost in time, but not quite, and the engine had run into, with barely enough time to jar the train to length.

"We see," he said, "you must have been shaken between two cars in some way."

"Will it hurt me?"

"No," the doctor replied.

"And the baby is safe?"

"Yes," the doctor replied, and he told

of the little slide-slide, which had been almost in time, but not quite, and the engine had run into, with barely enough time to jar the train to length.

"We see," he said, "you must have been shaken between two cars in some way."

"Will it hurt me?"

"No," the doctor replied.

Mr. Thomas Stewart was greatly startled on Monday morning on learning that his horse had bolted. Not wishing to have having mysteriously disappeared during the night, it was at first thought that the colt was stolen but diligent search being instituted the animal was found in the neighborhood of Paterson's Ferry. MINERAL RESOURCES OF ONTARIO.

We have received from Hon. C. Dury, Minister of Agriculture, a copy of the Report of the Royal Commission on the Mineral Resources of Ontario and Measures for their development. This commission was composed of the following commissioners: John Charlton, M. P., Robert Bell, Wm. C. Wm. Hamilton Merritt, with Mr. Archibald Smith as Secretary. The Report, which is contained in 21 volumes of 800 pages, is of a most exhaustive character and gives evidence that the Commissioners were anxious to fulfill their task in a thorough manner. The Commission for hearing evidence and examining the mineral resources of the province and the industrial establishments occupied in their development, were held at thirty-seven places in the province, including the cities, as representatives of The Times will remember, of Peterborough, Deseronto. One hundred and sixty-four witnesses were examined under oath and mines, mining locations and works in their vicinity were visited. The members of the Commission also made different sets of science, mines, etc., in different parts of the United States. The information obtained in this way is all given in a condensed but practical manner and is not too heavy for the general public to understand. In the section of the Report devoted to the geology of the province a systematic account is given of each one of its rock formations. All the latest results of geological explorations are embodied in the Report and the reader of the Report leaves little to be desired. Even a cursory perusal of the Report will show that Ontario possesses great mineral wealth and we can share in the regret of the Commissioners that the mining industry is not yet making such slow progress. Let us hope that the day is not far off when Ontario will take its proper place among the states of the world which are gaining in wealth and importance by the skillful development of their mineral resources which they have been favored by a kind Providence.

The Commission gave much attention to the iron industry and gathered a vast fund of information in relation to this branch of economic industry which will, doubtless, be studied and considered by the business men who are directing their attention to the manufacture of the various grades of iron. The Commissioners make several recommendations which will, we presume, be acted upon by the Legislative Assembly. These include the desirability of a school should be taken for the practical and scientific training of all who may engage in the industrial development of the mineral resources of the province. That mining engineers and metallurgists may receive a thorough system of instruction is recommended. The formation of a Bureau of Mines and the formation of a museum of geology and mineralogy to represent its rock formations and metallurgical products, together with an efficient plan for the collection of yearly statistics of the mining and metallurgical industries of the Province. The Report also includes an account of the mineral and metallurgical resources of the Province and is accompanied by valuable maps. The work of the Commission will give a stimulus to the study of geology, mineralogy and kindred subjects, and must give an impulse to prospecting, mining and the industrial development of the vast mining resources of Ontario.

KINGSFORD.

From Our Own Correspondent.

The Forest Mills Cheese Factory have been daily increasing in size, and during the past week and have made 16 and 17 cheeses a day. The third sale of cheese was made last week at $15 cents per pound, and two cheeses were shipped at Napane on Friday.

Several other accidents occurred here yesterday, among them, a stone through the glass window of Mr. Jones Doyle's barn, tore the end off the building, split the two heaviest beams, tore out one of the heavy doors and set fire to the stable.

Mr. Doyle and his horses on the farm, which were knocked down and stunned but escaped without serious injury. The barn of Mr. Henry Abbott was also struck and the ends torn off by the fall. Mr. Abbott had a horse killed by the electric light. There were several other minor accidents but fortunately there was no loss of life.

The great social event of the week was the social gathering of the Deseronto Club on Saturday evening which was well attended and proved extremely successful financially and otherwise. There was an excellent programme of vocal and instrumental music. A large party from Deseronto contributed to the entertainment.

VALDIMIR THE MONK.

BY SLYVANUS COBB, JR.

CHAPTER I.

The time at which we open our story is midwinter, and towards the close of the seventeenth century. Russia had passed through the long and bitter ordeal of National night. The Tartan yoke had been worn until the very bones of the nation were galvanized; and when this was over there followed, the Duke and Sweden plundered the country, and amid general insult and confusion some half dozen men were clamoring for the throne. At length a few patriotic citizens, pledging themselves to the cause of freedom from this curse of anarchy, and headed by a noble prince and an humble, patriotic butcher, made a bold stand to save the country. Moscow was retaken, and Michael Romanoff was chosen Czar—and this illustrious family still occupies the imperial throne. And now the day of Russian greatness dawned; but the sun was not fairly up—and the broad light opened not upon the empire—until Peter came to the throne.

In the department of the Shloboda—the suburbs of Moscow—and very near the river Moskva, stood an humble cot, the exterior which bore all the marks of a ramshackle shanty of that date of ours—its smallness of size. Nor was it so very small, in fact, but only in contrast; for near at hand about it stood many large, shabby, dingy-looking structures that overlapped the prim cot, as bleak mountain peaks look down upon a verdant hill. And within this cot was a nest as verdant. The two apartments in front, one of which was only used in winter, were furnished not only with meanness, but with a fair show of ornament and luxury. Back of these were a large cooking and dining room, and two small bedchambers; and back still from these was an artisan's shop, and other out-buildings. This shop was devoted principally to the manufacture of fire-arms. Some swords, and other edged weapons, were made here upon special application.

The gun-maker now stood by his forge watching the white smoke at it curled up towards the throat of the chimney. He was a young man, not over three-and-twenty, and possessed a frame of more than ordinary symmetry and muscular development. He was not large—not above the medium size—but a single glance at the swelling chest, the broad shoulders, and the sinewy ridges of the bare arms, told at once that he was master of great physical power. His features were regular, yet strongly marked, and eminent by hand; his brow, which was full and high, was half covered by the light brown curly hair that waved over it; while his eyes which were of a bright, brilliant, deep gray in color, lent a cast of genius to the intellect of the brood. His name was Ruric Nevel. His father had been killed in the late war with the Turks, and the son leaving his mother properly cared for, went to Spain soon after the bereavement. There he found work in the most noted armories; and now, well versed in the trade, he had returned to his native city to follow his calling, and support his mother.

Near by stood a boy—Paul Peepoff—a bright intelligent lad, some fifteen years of age, who had bound himself to the gun-maker for the purpose of learning the art. His hair and his eyes were darker than his master's, and if he possessed not so much sound intellect, he certainly possessed an unswerving integrity.

The sun had been some time below the horizon, and the only light of any consequence that made things partially visible within the shop came from the dull blaze of the coals on the fire, as Paul and an iron-bound door upon the bridle that moved the bellows. Suddenly Ruric started back from the forge as his mind broke from the deep reverie into which he had fallen, and having bade his boy to see that matters were properly disposed for the night he turned towards the door, and was soon in the kitchen, where his mother had supper all prepared and set out.

Claudia Nevel was a noble looking woman, if the impress of a noble, generous soul can be called such, and the light of her still handsome countenance was never brighter than when gazing upon her boy. She had seen the snows of fifty winters, and they had left some silver upon her head, and some age marks upon her face, the sunshine of fall as many summers had left her with a thankful, loving heart, and a prayerful loving soul.

“It is snowing again, faster than ever, remarked Paul, as he took his seat at the table.

“Ah,” returned Ruric, resting his knife a few moments while he bent his ear to listen to the voice of the storm. “I had hoped ‘twould know no more for the present. The snow is deep enough now. And how it blows!”

“Never mind,” spoke the dame in a crusty old voice, “it must storm when it lists, and we can only thank God that we have shelter, and pray for those who have none.”

“Amen” responded Ruric, fervently.

After this the trio remained some minutes silent, seeming to be busy in listening to the storm—but that came quickly to an end. The wind was high, and the snow was now dash upon the windows with a violence, maddeningly wild. The meal was at length eaten, and the table was laid, and shortly afterwards Paul retired to his bed. It was his wont to retire early, for he rose early to build the fires and prepare for the labors of the day.

Ruric drew his chair close up to the fireplace, and leaning against the jamb he bowed his head and pondered again. This had become habit with him of late. Sometimes he would sit thus during a whole hour without speaking, or even moving, and his mother did not interrupt him, as she supposed he might be solving some mechanical problem that had arisen to bother him. But these fits of thought had become too frequent, too lengthy, and too moody, for such a conclusion, and the good woman was forced to believe that they were caused by something more remote than the business of the forge or the lathes. The youth now sat with his head resting upon his hand, and his eyes bent upon the earth. For half an hour he had not moved, and his face wore an anxious troubled look.

“Ruric, my son,” spoke the mother at length, in a low, kind tone, “what is it that occupies your thoughts so much?”

The young man started and turned his gaze upon his mother.

“To me, my mother?” he asked, after having recalled his mind to thoughts about him.

“Yes, my boy,” she said, “I did speak to you. I asked you what it was that occupied your thoughts.”

“Oh—nothing—nothing,” Ruric answered, after some moments of hesitation. “I was only thinking—that was all.”

“I know you were thinking—and I know that was all at the time; but of what, Ruric? Come—hide no secret from your mother. I have noticed you late, and I know you are changed. That old smile is gone from your face, and sometimes I have feared the gladness was gone from your heart. I have seen you bent in thought over your work when I knew that of your work you were not thinking; and I have seen you buried in deep thought when you should be reading or conversing with me.”

“How I then offended you, my mother?”

“I am sorry, my noble boy. Never did such a thought enter my mind. If I have been made uneasy thereby it is only in love for thee, and the fear that thou wert not so happy as in the past. Will you tell me all? Oh, I hope my boy fears not to trust his mother with his thoughts.”

As she spoke thus she moved her seat close to where Ruric sat, and placed her hand upon his arm.

“Tell me, my boy,” she added in a low, persuasive tone, “what is it that dwells thus upon your mind.”

Ruric reached out and took his mother's hand, and having gazed for some moments into her face he said :

“Surely, my mother, I have nothing in my soul that would hide from thee. If I have kept my thoughts to myself with unseemly silence, it has been because I feared you would laugh at me if I told you of them.”

“Ah, no, my son,” the mother replied, almost reprovingly: “nothing that could claim such depth and absorbing consideration from a mind like yours would move me to derision. Speak plainly, and be sure of my sympathy.”

A few moments more the youth gazed silently upon his mother, and then he answered :

“All this thought has been of one person—of Rosalind Vidalai.”

Claudia Nevel started as she heard that name, and for the while the color forsook her cheeks.

“What, my dear boy—what of her have you thought?” she asked, tremulously.

“What, but of one thing, could I think, my mother? You have seen her?”

“Yes, Ruric.”

“And you have marked the grace, the loveliness, and soul-given beauty of the noble girl?”

“I know she is beautiful, my son; and also that she is good—at least, so I think.”

“Then what but love could move me with deep thought of her? Oh, my mother, I do love her. I love her with the whole strength of my heart and soul.”

“Alas, my Ruric, she will never dare love thee.”

“You know not that,” the youth quickly replied, his eyes burning deeply, and his own poor flushing. “Did I not know she loved me so well I would never have allowed my thoughts such range. We were children together, and even then we loved. Fate has dealt differently since those childhood times; but yet I am sure that her love for me is not changed, as save increasing age may change all the emotions of our nature into deeper, stronger lights and shades.”

“But think, my boy, you are a mere artisan—the offspring of meanness and the ward of a duke—a stern, old, proud aristocrat, who looks upon our station only as harsh masters look upon their beasts of burden. I fear you will find little else but misery in such a course of thought.”

“At least, my mother, I will see Rosalind; and if she loves me as I love her—and if she would accept my hand—”

“Hush, my boy. Do not cherish such hopes. Why should she mate with whom the richest nobles of the land would knell for her hand?”

“Hold it!” cried Ruric, starting to his feet, his hand some face flushed and his bright eye burning. “Speak not thus—at least, not now. I flatter not myself; but I claim a soul as pure, and a heart as noble, as any man in the land. My mind is as clear, my hope as high; my ambition as true to real greatness, and my will as firm, as any of them. If Rosalind seeks the love of a true heart, and the protection of stout arms and determined success, then I fear not to place myself by the side of any suitor in the land. But if she seeks immediate wealth, and the glitter of some high-sounding title, then, alas, I know she does not. But let it pass now. I will see her.”

Claudia would not oppose the wishes of her son, and the snows of winter now dash upon the windows with a violence, maddeningly wild. The meal was at length eaten, and the table was laid, and shortly afterwards Paul retired to his bed. It was his wont to retire early, for he rose early to build the fires and prepare for the labors of the day.

Ruric drew his chair close up to the fireplace, and leaning against the jamb he bowed his head and pondered again. This had become habit with him of late. Sometimes he would sit thus during a whole hour without speaking, or even moving, and his mother did not interrupt him, as she supposed he might be solving some mechanical problem that had arisen to bother him. “Ruric, my son,” spoke the mother at length, in a low, kind tone, “what is it that occupies your thoughts so much?”

The youth found the thickly gloved hand led the inviolate applicant into the hall he closed the door, and then led the way to the kitchen. As soon as the candle was re-lighted Ruric turned and gazed upon the new-comer. It was a monk—and habited something like one of the Black monks of St. Michael. He was of medium height, and possessed a rotundity of person which was comical to behold. He was fat and unwieldy, and waddled about with laughable steps. His huge black robe, which reached from his chin to his toes, was secured about the waist with a sash of the same color, and the snow, which lay upon the shoulders and back, presented a striking contrast. Ruric brushed away the snow with his own hand, and having taken his visitor's thick coat, the latter took a seat near the hearth.

“I know you were thinking—and I know that was all at the time; but of what, Ruric? Come—hide no secret from your mother. I have noticed you late, and I know you are changed. That old smile is gone from your face, and sometimes I have feared the gladness was gone from your heart. SUCIDE AT READ.

BELLEVILLE, June 7.—Advice reached the city to-day of a terrible tragedy committed at Read. Yesterday Thomas Cowan, hitherto a man of good reputation, in a fit of despondency severed his jugular vein on the right side of his neck in a stable. He was arrested in the city on a charge of drunkenness and disorderly conduct, for which he paid a fine of $15. He left the house for home next day with decided intentions never to take another drop. A feeling of despondency however, seemed to settle in him, and he was never after the same man. He was strange, silent, and his manner was mysterious. He would walk about with his head inclined and arms folded across his breast. Yesterday he committed suicide, and left his blacksmith shop for the last time. He went to the house, took something out of a drawer and left the back door. He went direct to the barn and cut through his throat with a scimitar. His wife was alarmed by screams, and when she found him was on his hands and knees, with his head hanging over the bar in his neck. He had walked the whole length of the barn and had entered another apartment, of which he locked the door and placed the razor on the salt barrel. He leaves a wife and six children under seven years of age. His remains were interred Tuesday.

UNCLE TOM'S CABIN.

George Burtt's Uncle Tom's Cabin Co. have been meeting with wonderful success during their eastern tour. They played at Ottawa last week and appear to have completely captured the Ottawa people judging by the tone of the newspapers. During our street parades they met the vice-regal carriage containing the Governor-General and the Duke and Duchess of Connaught. Their royal highnesses kindly saluted the veteran Burtt and his company and smiled their best wishes. The Free Press has referred to the Committee.

The George Burtt Uncle Tom's Cabin Co. are still playing to the capacity of the mammoth pavilion at the corner of Rideau and Sussex streets. Still, it is not to be wondered at, for it is the best representation of the drama and pantomime that has ever been presented in our city. It is a great success.

A new Methodist church will be erected in the north half of Bancroft mission; it will be the first protestant church north of Maynooth.

Miss Elizabeth Needham, Pakenham, came home some time ago, and recent-ly slipped off and worked her own destruction.

Anson P. Vanluer, of Morven, has rye fifty inches in height, a fair average of a small field sown. The rye grew six inches in three days.

Mr. Clarke has refitted the mills at considerable expense and has added a lath and shingle mill and is engaged in erecting a grist mill. He was in the city to day making arrangements for the machinery.

All was not plain sailing at Ottawa, however, as the following account of an accident to the Canadian Pacific Railway shows: "About 12.30 the band of Uncle Tom's Cabin Co. were performing in a theatre in Ottawa. The band had just returned from a street parade when the matinee today the tent was packed with ladies and children. It was the best until now, and it was evident that Mr. Burtt did not make his stay in the city longer, as it would be profitable to him and instructive and pleasing to our community." ### ST. MARK'S CHURCH NOTES.

Dr. Whitteman has moved his office to Mr. Richard Morden's residence, immediately opposite the post office, Melrose. All interested will please note this fact.

Farmers' Fests.

We are informed that the wire worm is causing very much damage to wheat in this district. A grub is also found in the seedbeds in the corn. There is always something to worry the honest farmers.

Boundary Road.

We trust that the members of township and county will not forget the boundary road and that they will contribute to be given to put it into proper shape.

As a great number of people in Tyendinaga and Richmond are interested in this matter it is only reasonable to suppose that they will be anxious to help out this year by authorizing a sum of money to advantage.

Locomotive Shops.

A large Universal Radial Drilling Machine capable of boring in a radius of six feet has been introduced into the new locomotive shop by Mr. Irvine. It cost about $1,160. Other new machinery, such as etc., has also been added. Painters have been busy this week lettering and decorating the new tender for the Bay of Quinte railway. In the boiler department a new firebox has been made for the small locomotive.

Sands and Dams Factory.

Everything is blooming in the saw and door factory of the Rathbun Company. Among other big orders recently received by Mr. Wm. Irvine, superintendent of this establishment, is one for furnishing the door frame for the new residence of Mr. and Mrs. McCullough, which is to be finished for sixteen dwelling houses to be erected in Quebec city. All this material must be delivered by July 1st. This season promises to be one of the most prosperous in the history of this large factory.

Fruit Sale.

The "Fruit Aid" Society of St. Mark's Church, as will be seen by advertisement, will hold their fancy sale on the afternoon and evening of Thursday, 19th inst., on the beautiful grounds of John McCullough, Esq., Dundas street. A large quantity of fancy and dried fruits will be offered for sale, and the refreshment tables will be loaded with delicacies of all kinds. The Citizens Band will furnish music. An admission fee of 10 cents will be charged in the evening. All aid and encourage the ladies by your presence.

Ausewell.

Much of the success of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company in getting traffic for the railway may be attributed to the use of printing and new methods of advertising. The latest publication which they have issued is the best yet sent out by this company. It consists of two neat maps arranged on one large sheet, one showing their great through line from Montreal to the Pacific, the other their other Canadian and American lines and connections. The maps reflect much credit on the advertising department of the company who has our thanks for the copy which now adorns our sanctum.

Masonic Exercises.

A numerous party of excursionists, including a particularly large number of pretty young ladies, crowded the streets on Wednesday afternoon, May 29th, to witness the annual excursion party from Shannonville, who were allowed an hour to do up Deseronto on their return home from Picton. The Ella Ross, an excellent excursion boat, carried the party from Shannonville to Picton and return. The weather was favorable throughout the excursion and pleasure. The excursionists reported a very happy time and a kind reception by the brethren at Picton. The officers of the Ella Ross were courteous and the excursion must be voted a success even though held so early in the season.

Methodist Conference.

Rev. A. Campbell and Mr. W. R. Aylenworth were attending the meeting of the Bay of Quinte Conference at Cobourg during the past week. Rev. Wm. Burns was elected President for the present year. Rev. W. R. Young was elected Secretary and Revs. D. O. Crossley and E. F. Gee, assistant secretaries. Rev. R. W. Aylenworth was appointed chairman of the committee on finance, and was also appointed one of the clerical delegates to the general conference. The lay delegates from the Napanee district are W. F. Hall and A. L. Merden; Bellwood, Wm. W. Williams; Holgate, Picton, Dickson, G. H. Pitt and C. S. Wilson. The statistical committee reported a membership of 29,965, an increase of 787. Mr. W. R. Aylenworth was appointed a member of the Property Committee.

Leading Business College.

Undoubtedly Belleville Business College is the best equipped and most modern Business College in Canada. The building is a hard working and honorable man who has had many years of successful business experience and knows what is necessary for young men and women to know, to be assured of success. It would be difficult to find a more complete course of training than is given in this institution. Its adaptation to the wants of the times is wonderful. The students are well fitted for business (in a short space of time) that in a majority of cases they are offered positions of responsibility and advancement.

The principal professors and teachers are gentlemen of experience and high moral standing. The College buildings and grounds are excellent and are admirably adapted to the accommodation of the students. We wish this institution continued success.

VALDIMIR THE MONK.

BY STEPHEN COPE, JR.

CHAPTER III.

That night Rosalind Nevel had strange fancies while walking in strange dreams while sleeping. Long and deeply did he pass from the room the business which had led Count Conrad to his shop, and in no way, under no light, could he get any reason from it. Why he, a youth who had never spoken with the proud Duke, say once on common business, and who was so far down in the social scale, should have been called upon to give a virtual consent to the bestowal of Rosalind Valdin's hand, was beyond his ken. He was but a poor aristocrat—she, a wealthy heiress and a scion of nobility—and she was under the legal guardianship of the Duke, whose word, so far as she was concerned, was law. Again Conrad Damonoff was amazed and repelled to be wealthy. To be sure, he was some what disengaged from that a majority of his compatriots were the same. Now, if this favored the lady Rosalind, and had asked for her hand, and the Duke was willing he should have it, why had this extraordinary proposal been sent to the poor gentleman?

Ruric asked this question of himself a hundred times. He would begin and lay down all the premises in his mind, and then he would try to make the deduction; but no reasonable one could he arrive at. One thought clung about him like a dim specter at night, which hope would make an angel, and which fear would paint a demon. Could it possibly that Rosalind had told her love for him, and that the Duke would pay some deference to it? He tried to think so. Hope whispered that it might be so.

In the hall he threw on his heavy pelisse and having reached the nearest hospitable he took a horse and sledge and started off for the Kremlin, within which the Duke resided.

Within one of the sumptuously furnished apartments of the palace of the Duke of Tula, sat Rosalind Valdin. She was a beautiful girl, clothed in perfect form with the full flush of health and vigor, and possessing a face of peculiar sweet and intelligence. She was only nineteen years of age, and had been ten years an orphan. Her hair was of a golden hue, and the sunlight loved to dwell amid the clustering carols. Her eyes, which were of a deep, liquid blue, sparkled brightly when she was happy; and when she smiled the lovely depth of her cheeks held the smile even after it had faded from her lips. There was nothing of the aristocrat in her looks—nothing proud, nothing haughty, but gentle and low were the true elements of her soul, and she could only be happy when she knew that she was truly loved. She liked respect, but she spurned that respect which only aims at outward show, while the heart may be reeking with vilest sensualism.

Rosalind sat there, in the apartment which was hers for her own private use, and was sad and thoughtful. One fair hand supported her pure brow, while with the other she twisted the ends of the silken sash that confined her heavy robe. Thus she sat when the door of her apartment was opened, and a young girl entered. The new comer was a small, fair creature, bright and quick, with that raven hair, which bespeak the child of Moloch blood. Her name was Zenobie, and she was now about sixteen years of age. Rosalind's father had picked her up on the battlefield from which the Turks had fled, and being unable to find any claimant he had brought her home, then almost an infant. And now she was Rosalind's attendant and companion. She loved her kind and gentle mistress, and would have laid down life itself in her service.

"How now, Zenobie?" asked Rosalind, as she noticed the girl hesitate.

"There is a gentleman below who would see you," the girl replied.

"Tell him I can not see him," said Rosalind, trembling.

"But this is Rosalind, my mistress."

"Ruric" uttered the fair maiden, starting up, while the rich robes mounted to her brow and temples. "Oh, I am glad he has come. My prayers were surely answered. Lead him hither, Zenobie."

The girl departed, and ere long afterwards Ruric entered the apartment. He walked quickly to where Rosalind had arisen to her feet, and taking one of her hands in both his own he pressed it to his lips. He had had a well-formed speech upon his lips when he entered the room, but 'twas gone now. He could only gaze into the lovely face before him, and murmur the name that sounded so sweetly to his ears. But the emotion of his soul became calm at length, and then he spoke with more freedom.

"Lady," he said, after he had taken a seat, "you will pardon me for this visit when you know its cause. And you will pardon me, too, if I speak plainly what I have to speak."

"Oh—call me Ruric. Let us at least not forget the friendship of childhood."

"Then I am not a lady," said Rosalind, smiling.

"No, Rosalind."

"Ah, Ruric."

"As we were in childhood," whispered the youth.

"In all but years," returned Rosalind, in the same low tone.

"And I may wear the same image in my heart!"

"I cannot eat it from mine if I would."

"The image of childhood, dear Rosalind?"

"Aye—say that it has grown to manhood, dear Ruric."

What more could he ask for love? He had not aimed at this confession so soon. But he put it from him now. He gazed a moment into the fair maiden's kindling eye, and as he saw the love-lit tear gathering there and the happy smile working its way along the rosy lips, and away in the joyous dimples, he opened his arms and clasped fondly loved one to his bosom.

"Oh, I am not deceived in this," he murmured. "Speak, dearest one."

"I can not forget the love of the happy times gone," the noble girl replied gazing up through her happy tears. "Oh, how many and many an hour have I prayed to God that those days might return, and that the one true heart of earth I loved might be mine once more. Ruric, why should I hide the truth, or why set it aside? They are all in all. I have no one else to love, and none to love me else, save the noble girl who brought to him. I can tell you all."

Happy Ruric! Happy at that moment—forgetting all else but the love that gleamed upon them then, he clasped the cherished object ardently to his bosom.

But the moments flew on, and at length his mind came to the subject of his visit.

"Rosalind," he said, holding one of her fair hands in his grasp, "you know the Count Conrad Damonoff?"

"Yes," returned the maiden, with a shudder. "He is here very often, and he has forced himself upon my companion hip when, if he had sense, he must have known I liked it not."

"He is a suitor for your hand, is he not?"

"He was; but he is not now."

"Not now?" repeated Ruric, with surprise.

"Myself simply that he has asked the Duke for me, and that he was answered in the negative."

"Did you hear the Duke answer him so?"

"No; but so the Duke assured me he had done. But what mean you?"

"I will tell you. Yesterday the Count came to my dwelling, accompanied by Stephen Urzen. He had a paper drawn upon the Duke's own hand, in which I was made to say—or rather, by which the writer said—that he disclaimed all pretensions to your hand, and that he wished not to marry you—that he freely gave you, meaning to seek within the sphere of his own social circle some companion when he wished. And this I was asked to sign."

"By the Count?"

"Yes—by the Duke's orders."

"Oh—it cannot be," uttered the fair girl, trembling.

"And he further assured me that the Duke had requested him to obtain my signature thereto, so that he might receive your hand without impediment."

"So that the Count might receive my hand?"

"Yes."

"But the Duke assured me only yesterday that I should be troubled nomenclature with the Count. May there not be some mistake?"

"There can be no mistake on my part. The instrument was in the Duke's own hand."

"But you did not sign it."

"Ask me if I took my own life—if I made a curse for all I loved."

"It is strange," the maiden murmured, bowing her head a few moments. "And yet," she added, looking up into her companion's face, "I do not think the Duke would be treacherous?"

"He may be," answered Ruric. "He knows how lightly our noble emperor holds empty titles, and perhaps he fears if this matter came to the imperial ear, and you should claim the right to marry with whom you pleased, Peter would grant your prayer. Hence he wished to give my claim set aside so that he may have a clearer field in which to move. Do you know how the Duke's affairs stand at present?"

Rosaldin stood awhilo ere she answered; and then, while a startled expression came to her face she said:

"Ruric, I do remember now that between the Duke and young Damonoff there is some matter of dispute. There is some question of property."

"Ah," uttered the youth earnestly. "How is that?"

"Why—as near as I can understand, there was a dispute between the Duke and the elder Damonoff concerning the ownership of Drotzen, the estate on the Don, in Kaluga; and since the father's death, Conrad has maintained his family claim. You know the Duke and the old Count married sisters, and this estate belonged to them."

"Do you mean the black monk—Valdin?" asked the young man, starting.

"Yes, my master. He called here about the middle of the forenoon. He wanted one of the small daggers with the pearl hilt."

"And did you let him have one?"

"Certainly. I paid my four ducats for it, and would have paid more had I been willing to take it."

"And did he make any conversation?"

"Yes. He asked me why the Count Damonoff came here yesterday."

"How—how did he know of their visit?"

"He was waiting at the inn for a sledge when he overheard the Count and his companion conversing upon the subject."

"And did he ask you any questions touching the particulars?"

"Yes—many."

"And how answered you?"

"I told him the whole story, from beginning to end. I found that he knew something of thunders from what he accidentally overheard, and rather than have him go on full of rumors, I told him all."

"Of the message, too?"

"Yes, my master. I told him all that happened, from the showing of the paper with the Duke had drawn up, to the doings of the angry man."

"And what did the man say?" Ruric asked very earnestly.

"Why—he said he knew the Count, and that he was a proud, reckless fellow, and worth little to society. That was all. He did not seem to care much about it anyway; only he said he should have done just as you did, and that every law of justice would honor you."

"Very well," returned Ruric. "I can matter little what the monk thinks about it, though I would rather have him know the truth if he must know anything, for I would not be misinterpreted."

"He understands it all now, my master; and I trust you are not offended at the liberty I took in telling him."

"Not at all, Paul—not at all."

Here the conversation dropped, and the work was resumed in silence. It was past three o'clock when Ruric's mother came and informed him that a gentleman in the house would speak with him.

"Is it Stephen Urzen?" asked the youth.

"His mother said it was."

"Then bid him come out here."

Claudia retired and in a few moments the lowest estate of poverty, so long as your generosity, pure soul was free, I bring a message to you. Oh, my love knows only the heart when it is seemed, and for my future of joy I say all the truth of the mystery of human love."

"Bless you, dearest," Ruric murmured, clasping the fair being to his bosom. And for a long while Rosalind's head lay upon the shoulder of the man she so truly fondly loved.

That was not the time for bringing forward doubts and fears. Ruric had many questions in mind concerning the implements that stood in the way of their union; but he kept them to himself now. At length he arose to take his departure, and he simply said, as he drew the maiden to his side:

"You will not allow the Duke to give you away?"

"Never, Ruric."

"If he asks you for your hand to bestow upon any of his friends, you will tell him—"

"That my heart is not mine to give, and that my hand cannot go without me."

"Oh—bless you, Rosalind—bless you! God keep and guard you ever."

There was one war, ardent pressure of lip to lip, and then Ruric Nevel turned away, and was soon in the open court. Here he entered his sledge, and then drove to the barracks in the Kitagorod, where he inquired for Alaric Orsa, a lieutenant of the guard. The officer was quickly found, and as he met Ruric his salutation was warm and cordial. He was a young man not over five-and-twenty, and one of the finest-looking soldiers in the guard.

"Alaric," said the gun-maker, after the first friendly salutations had passed, "I may have a meeting with Conrad, Count Damonoff. He has sought a quarrel—in suited me most grossly—aimed a blow at the pistol, or the gun, he is not certain."

"While you imagine I am," said Ruric, with a contemptuous curl of the lip; for he knew that the man was lying. He could see the fellow's very looks that Damonoff had commissioned him to broach this matter.

"Of course you are," returned Orsa.

"And the Count is most excellently versed in the use of the sword, is he not?"

"He is accounted a fair swordsman."

"Ay—so I thought. But it matters not to me. The thought had not entered my mind before, save that I supposed swords would be the only weapon thought of. However, Orsa will settle it with you; but I, as his friend, deem it not right that he should speak of it—I trust you will choose a gentleman's weapon. In the case of the pistol, or the gun, he is not certain."

more the gentleman has appeared. "Ruric Nevel," he said, bowing very stiffly and haughtily. "I bring a message from the Count Damonoff."

"Very well, sir," returned the gun-maker proudly.

Stephen Urzen drew a sealed note from his pocket and handed it to Ruric, who took it and broke the seal. He opened it and read as follows:

"The Count—An assault of the most aggravated nature has for the time past put all distinction of caste between us. Your blood alone can wash out the stain. I would not murder you outright, and to no other end would I have you dead. But I would have you dead before me, and I would have you dead before the world. If you dare not meet me, say so, that all may know who is the coward."

"DAMONOFF."

When Ruric had read this note he crushed it in his hand, and gazed his beater some moments in the face without speaking.

"Will you answer?" asked Urzen. He spoke more softly than before, for he saw something in the gun-maker's face he dared not provoke.

"Are you acquainted with Alaric Orsa, a lieutenant of the guard?"

"Yes, sir."

"Then you and I need have no more to say."

"Only on one point," said Urzen, with some little show of confusion. "You are the chosen party, and you will have the choice of weapons."

"I may refer to your sword, sir?"

nation has reached its present point by successful war. The soul of our nation is built upon military honor, and since our noble Emperor has opened the way of advancement of the lowest of his subjects who are brave and true, the coward is looked upon with disgust upon all hands.

For some moments Claudia Nevel was silent. But at length she said, while white glistened in her eyes:

"I have given one loved being up to my country, and I would ill afford to lose my son. Yet, rather than remain here, I would have him go to me, and I would have him bound by his plaus."

WAYS OF FAIR WOMEN.

GOSPISS ABOUT HER DOINGS THAT WILL INTEREST BOTH SEXES.

Who the Rich Women of Philadelphia Are —The Present Queen of Opera Bouffe in France—Famous Collections of Lace Owned in New York.

There are women who look like their pictures, there are others who look like their original from life. Mrs. Cleveland belongs to the latter class. The other evening I sat with a few feet of her for three rather long hours. The wife of the ex-president was there, too, and a very attractive looking woman, which is supported by her photographs. She is rather pale, though the pallor does not indicate ill health, and her face is rounder than a quiet one. The wrinkles little white marks of age are visible, but she is still very young, and the contrast has a sweetness and sensibility which is not in any of the pictures. She is a less handsome woman than the present queen would have been imagined, but she is equally attractive in her looks. She is very quick of motion and turns the leaves of her libretto with a nervousness which one would not expect from her general bearing.—N. Y. Letter.

White House Economy.

Imagination fails me to picture the Presidential family as living in the plenitude of splendor and luxury. Any other house in town almost offers more real comfort to its occupants, and there are a hundred houses where more art and luxury are found in the finish and fittings. The family room is large, but it is not so large that it is private and their own save the end of the dreary corridor upstairs. The offices have absorbed so much of the house that only one bed-chamber can be found upstairs for the greater part of the family. The truth is, however, that the house is thoroughly scrubbed with this emulsion of water, the carpets are often turned and the curtains patched. Mrs. Harrison says anxiously, "If we can afford new curtains this year," quite as if she were a housekeeper with a husband on a slender salary instead of the mistress of the White House—Washington Letter to Philadelphia Press.

Rich Philadelphia Socialites.

Philadelphia socialites are limited probably from twenty to twenty-five women who are worth a million or more. She has twice that many, women who are worth more than half a million dollars, and there are hundreds of women in the city who possess from $50,000 to $100,000 each. The wealthiest woman in Philadelphia is believed to be Mrs. Anna M. Powers, widow of Thomas H. Powers, who was during his lifetime the head of the firm of Powers & Walker. Mrs. Powers' jewels are apparently estimated at from $80,000 to $100,000 and the latter sum is believed to be nearer her actual wealth than the former. She lives very quietly in a handsome mansion at No. 1618 Walnut street. Much of her wealth is invested in real estate, and she owns row after row of houses in different sections of the city.—Philadelphia Press.

The Queen of Opera Bouffe.

American girls possess an elegant beauty, India was considered the most fascinating beauty on the French stage for years, though she had round shoulders and a shapeless figure. Her only attractive feature was her voice, and that a mere eight-year-old girl was fascinated and mesmerized. The girl was studying in the conservatory, made up her mind to detract the reigning beauty of the light opera stage. Her name was Granier, and she went about her work in a fashion that was to be copied by all. She was a prima donna, rode, swam and developed her figure exactly as an American girl does, besides studying night and day with prominent professionals in the art of singing and acting. Now she is the queen of opera bouffe in France. She is still near-sighted, but she has a perfect figure and dances like a fawn. Success is hers.—Philadelphia Press.

What the Queen of Opera Bouffe.

Since goldfish medallions have again come into style dealers have been placed frequently in a very delicate position when some lady has come in to complain that the necklace sold her was of inferior quality, as is crooked or blackened on her neck. Recent reports from America state that the jeweler who has disclosed the fact that this is due entirely to the contact of the beads with a neck upon which face powder had been used. The smallest amount of powder, if taken off, will be continually wiped off to cause this complaint. This is some jeweler makes a jewel of pure gold, and write it on a skin over which powder or fine dust has been strewn, and the result will be a distinct mark. It is a delicate thing to tell a lady that her fair neck is powdered, but the jeweler must either do this or admit the inferiority of his goods.

In Street Dress.

It is very smart these days to be exceedingly simple in street dress. The swarthy girl makes herself as smooth and plain and as possible. There must be no flying ribbons, no jingling chateaux, no rattling bangles. The severe linen collar and cuffs have again appeared, and the girl who is not going along with her chin in the air looking for all the world like a tightly curbed horse. She must be simple, too, in her diet. So runs fashion's mandate. Therefore she goes in for brown bread and drinks richly in the spirit of economy. A girl of very pretty woman is imitating in the secrecy of their chambers along with their "dearest" is the fascinating, insidious, beautifully colored creame de menthe. It's delicious to taste, but look out for the bite of the serpent, and the sting of the arrow will Arnold to its effect.—Chicago Herald-N.Y. Letter.

Fortunes in Lace.

There are fortunes in lace in New York City. Those belonging to the several Vanderbilts must be worth nearly $500,000, and rival the Prussian and Austrian crown ladies. The late Mrs. Astor left for $40,000 to $50,000 worth to the Metropolitan Art Museum. The late Mrs. A. T. Stewart knew many millions, and she also left a good collection and spent $500,000 for the curtains at the big gloomy mansion's windows. Her personal and dress laces were worth $250,000. Mrs. R. L. Stuart has a collection equally valuable. Mrs. Bradley Martin and Mrs. Marshall Roberts have exquisitely fine, choice and rare lace. Vice-President Morton's wife and Mrs. W. C. Whitney have lace worth from $50,000 to $70,000. New York buys more lace than any other city in the world. It has at least a score of wealthy women whose lace exceed $50,000 in value and probably a hundred whose collections would sell for $20,000. The lace cloaks that have lately come to the market figure in the way of affluent matrons are worth from $10,000 and $10,000. Lace shawls long since laid by are brought out for dress draperies and scarfs in the lace revival, and one dressmaker claims to have had a lace shawl two years ago. The late Mrs. John Jacob Astor had a famous lace robe that cost $18,000 in Paris, but this is quite outdone by a dress lately heard of, which was bought abroad for $35,000.—N. Y. Letter to Savannah News.

INSECTICIDES.

In Bulletin No. 56 of the Michigan Experiment Station, Prof. Cook gives a review of various insecticides, from which we draw the following matter as being of service at this season. For bugs, plant and scale insects, the known emulsion is highly recommended. His method of preparing it is as follows: "Mix one quart of soft soap or one quarter of hard soap with one or two quarts of boiling water, and as soon as the suds are formed add one pint of kerosene oil; stir violently until permanently mixed. When ready to use, this stir in excess of water to make fifteen parts of water."—Green's.

The Persian Insect Powder may be sifted on the plants or applied mixed with water, a heaping tablespoonful to two gallons of the liquid. It is also used by comb and not by water, and is recommended for the same insects which is supported by how photographs. Sir is rather pale, though the pallor does not indicate ill health, and her face is rounder than a quiet one. The wrinkles little white marks of age are visible, but the contrast has a sweetness and sensibility which is not in any of the pictures. She is a less handsome woman than the present queen would have been imagined, but she is equally attractive in her looks. Nothing is better than this for destroying the cabbage caterpillar, pear and cherry tree slugs and plant lice, but for the latter the kerosene emulsion is more satisfactory.

A tobacco decoction is also valuable. This may be made from raw tobacco, one pound to a gallon of water, or by boiling the leaves of the tobacco; when ready to use, this stir in excess of water to make fifteen parts of water.

Carbolic Acid Emulsion. This is highly recommended as a valuable compound for the fruit grower. It is made from carbolic acid emulsion, one pound to five or seven parts of the soap solution being the proper strength. This is recommended as the best protection against the bark lice and the aphid, and is especially useful in the vineyard.

The Fairmont. This is the best remedy for the fruit grower. One pound to four gallons of water, makes a very effective decoction. Turn boiling water on to the tobacco; when cool strain out the tobacco, and the decoction is ready for use. This is very effective against the striped beetle.

REMARKABLE ESCAPE.

When the steamer Quetta was suddenly lost near the Australian coast among the passengers was Miss Lucy. The steamer struck an uncharted rock and sank in three minutes about 9 P.M. She tells her dreadful experience thus:

I found myself going down, and as I was drinking the salt water I thought I was going to drown! But I came up again surprised, and I was saved. In fact, I was about one hundred and thirty-three thousand miles, in America one hundred and ninety thousand, and in Asia seventeen thousand eight hundred, in Australasia ten thousand five hundred miles, and in Africa, the Dark Continent, three thousand miles.

Of the increase of sixty thousand miles, which has been made in a short four years, no less than forty thousand was in America, and thirty thousand of the increase was in Australia. I am now about one hundred and forty thousand miles away from the place where I started.

THE PRINCE'S FRIEND.

 THE English in India are, as everybody knows, a small community settled in the country, consisting of native population which does not love them. This circumstance, one mightagine, would indicate a disregard of common humanity and a disregard of social differences. A greater mistake could not be made. Among Anglo-Indians brotherly feeling is "conspicuous" by its absence. The social life and manners are terribly poor and more bitter with them than in the most worn-out of Western societies. The little community is split up into a dozen petty castes and circles, which affect to look down on each other with a contempt only second to that with which they all regard the "natives."

That was the state of affairs at Pukabrandy when Mr. Charles Oberproof entered there. Leaving out the native soldiers and other officials, there were about fifty Europeans in the city. These fifty were divided into half a score of classes—or rather castes—which barely recognized the existence of each other. First came the Colours and the officers of the white regiment, who formed the crews de la cruse of Pukabrandy society; they just condescended to speak to the officers of the native regiments, the leading civil servants, and the like. Next came the traders and barbers, who had their turn formed by themselves, which regarded the others which jealousy, the officers of the white regiment with hatred, and the planters and merchants who formed the rest of the English community with contempt.

It was to the last class that Mr. Oberproof had been admitted, as he himself regarded it, to belong. He had come to Pukabrandy as representative of the great firm of Messrs. Unter & Oberproof, wine and spirit merchants. The brandy and rum department at Pukabrandy, owing to the habits of the Indians, was in a peculiarly prosperous condition, and if Mr. Oberproof had been an ordinary trader, his affairs would have fully occupied his time and thoughts. But he was not an ordinary trader. Though born from neglect of mind, he was a son of a son of a son, and destined after higher things. He thirsted for social success. When at home in England he had not been more active in seeking orders for wines and spirits than in cultivating the favor of the nobility of his father's house, the firm's patrons. And now, away in Pukabrandy, he was not more eager for the extension of the brandy's business than he was for the privilege and pleasure, as he styled it, of mingling with the elite of Pukabrandy society. He had a son, and that son had a son, and after higher things. He thirsted for social success. When at home in England he had not been more active in seeking orders for wines and spirits than in cultivating the favor of the nobility of his father's house, the firm's patrons.

However, it is the mark of a great man to covet social success, and that is what Mr. Oberproof resolved to do. He soon struck out a line of campaign by which he hoped before long to succeed in forcing his way into the best company in Pukabrandy. As he already been hinted, the European denizens of Pukabrandy were divided into castes. All of them, and more especially Col. Toddy and the officers of the white regiment wanted also a good deal of credit. It was in these two circumstances that Mr. Oberproof recognized an instrument by means of which he could before long force open the gates of Pukabrandy.

The previous representative of Messrs. Unter & Oberproof had been very averse to the credit system, but with a difference. He was very cautious in his dealings with the law-abiding members of society, but the miscreants were never denied him. The officers of the navy/force could have almost what they liked, and as for Col. Toddy and the officers of the white regiment, no length or breadth or depth of credit was too much for them. They were the only ones who since were at their command whether they happened to have money to pay for them or not. Consequently, before Mr. Oberproof was six months in Pukabrandy almost every man of them was over head and ears in his debts.

Mr. Oberproof felt that the time for action had arrived. He began operations by asking Capt. Fuzelle of the Sepoys to a quiet little dinner. Now, the Captain would have liked to decline, but he could not afford to offend Mr. Oberproof, as he overreached himself in his proposal. So he agreed to go, and was prepared to pay. So, after casting about for a time in vain to find an excuse for not accepting, he accepted. Mr. Oberproof had now his chance, and he made full use of it. After he had softened Capt. Fuzelle's heart with a good story, he told him how good wine he had imported into ear a long account of the various grand acquaintances he had in England. He talked familiarly of the Duchess of Doublechin, Lord William Morland, Lord De Celler, and the Hon. Frank Terington, and so on. The Captain was not prepared to pay. So, after casting about for a time in vain to find an excuse for not accepting, he accepted. Mr. Oberproof had now his chance, and he made full use of it. After he had softened Capt. "The fact is that I have just come word that your Highness has been here a few days and is going to stop a night with us on our way to Lahore, and as you're the only man at the station who has ever met him, we want you to come and give us some tips as to his tastes, so that we may know how to entertain him. Now, he's here and comes to you, and before Mr. Oberproof gets here, let me get you off his back!"

"I am sorry, but I have no time to give him any advice," said Capt. Fuzelle.

"Oh, Oberproof!" cried "I want to speak to you. You'll dine with us to-night, won't you? Now, don't say no."

"With pleasure, Colonel," replied Mr. Oberproof, surprised and gratified by this sudden proposal.

"Well, I'll see you to-morrow morning," he said, after a pause, as a vague suspicion fluttered across his mind that possibly he might be wanted not entirely for his own sake.

"No, not exactly," replied the Colonel.

Sanitary.

It was stated last winter that a grippa was the malady of choice. An outbreak of smallpox occurred at Madrid de Rio in Spain and the death rate has already been numerous. It will be very difficult to check the progress of this dread disease and that there is a probability of its being carried to America. An presents in Ireland, care will be only prudence for each resident of Deseronto to exercise the greatest care by removing all garbage and trash from around the house. It is a misfortune that the local health is cramped in its operations and that it is powerless to assist in this difficult task of removing the dirt and filth accumulations of town. There is no sweeping along the boundary road, and Richmond and Deseronto should be indicted for allowing that road to be used for such a purpose. In the meantime let every citizen do his best to conserve the public health.

VALDIMIR THE MONK.

BY SYLVANUS COBB, JR.

On the following morning Ruric was up betimes and at the breakfast table not a word of the one all-absorbing theme was uttered. After the meal was finished the gun-maker went out to his shop and lay down from one of the closets a long leather case, in which he had laid the tool of the same make and finish, only different in size. They were Toledo blades, and of most exquisite workmanship and finish. Ruric took out the heaviest one, which was a two-edged weapon with a cross hilt of heavily gilded metal. He placed the point upon the floor and then with all his weight he beat the blade till the pommel touched the point. The little steel sprang back to its place with a clang, and the texture was not started. Then he struck the flat of the blade upon the anvil with great force. The ring was sharp and clear, and the weapon remained unharmed.

"By St. Michael, Paul, Moscow does not contain another blade like that. Damacus never saw a better."

Thus spoke the gun-maker to his boy as he balanced the beautiful weapon in his hand.

"I think you are right, my master," the boy returned, who had beheld the trial of the blade with unabated admiration.

"But," he added, "could you not temper a blade like that?"

"Perhaps, if I had the steel. But I have it not. The steel of these two blades came from India, and was originally in one weapon—a ponderous, two-handed affair, belonging to a Bengal chieftain. The metal possesses all the hardness of the finest razor, with the elasticity of the most subtle spring. My old master at Toledo gave me these as a momento. Were I to mention the sum of money he was once offered for the largest of you would hardly credit it."

"How much?" asked Paul, with a boy's curiosity.

"It was a sum equal to about seven hundred ducats."

"And yet he gave it away!"

"Aye—for its price was but imaginary, while its worth to him was only commensurate with the good it did him. If he told the truth he loved me, and these he gave me as a parting gift, as the best portraiture I could wish for making such."

After this Ruric put up the small sword, and then he gave Paul a few directions about the work, promising to be back before night. The faithful boy shook his head dubiously as he heard this promise, but he said nothing, and shortly afterwards Ruric went into the house. Just then Alaric Oras drove up to the door.

Ruric was all ready but putting on his bonnet and pelisse. His mother was in the kitchen. He went to her with a smile upon his face. He put his arms about her and drew her to his bosom.

"God bless you, my mother! I shall come back." He said this, and then killed her.

"God keep—and—"

It was all she could say.

Ruric gazed a moment into her face—then kissed her again—and again he said:

"God bless you, my mother! I shall come back."

He dared not stop to speak more. Gently seizing his fond mother upon a chair he turned and hurried from the place. In the hall he threw on his pelisse and bonnet, and then he opened the door and passed out.

"Have you a good weapon?" asked Oras, as the horse started on.

"I have a fair one. I think it will not deceive me," returned Ruric.

"I asked," replied Oras, "because Damoff prides himself upon the weapon he wears. It is a German blade, and he thinks he can cut in twain the blade of any other weapon in Moscow with it."

"I have a good weapon," said Ruric, said quietly; "and one which has stood more tests than most swords will bear." And after some further remarks he related the peculiar circumstances attending the making of the sword, and his possession of it.

At length they struck upon the river, and in half an hour more they reached the appointed spot.

The day was beautiful. The sun shone brightly upon the glistening snow, and the air was still and calm. The shadow of the atmosphere served only to brace the system, and Ruric threw open his pelisse that he might breath more freely. He had been upon the ground but a few minutes when the other party came in sight upon the head of the river.

As soon as the Count and his second arrived, and the horses had been secured, the lieutenant proposed that they should repair to the building which was close at hand. This was a large open boat-house, which was unused and deserted in the winter, and it was proposed to go in there because the reflection of the strong sunlight from the bright snow was calculated to blind and blare the eye.

"Ha! what means that?" uttered Oras, as he saw a sledge just tearing the bend of the river with an officer in it.

"It is only a surgeon," replied Damoff. "I would not cut a man's flesh without giving him a fair chance to survive it."

"And then you may find him serviceable to yourself, eh?" suggested the lieutenant.

"Of course. There is no telling what may happen."

In a moment more the new sledge came up, and Ruric recognized its inmate as an army surgeon whom he had seen before, though he knew him not.

"Now for the old boat-house," cried Ur-en.

"Aye," added Damoff. "Let us have this business done, for I would be back to dinner. I dine with Olga to-day, and a fair audience awaits my coming."

"Notice him not," whispered Oras, who walked close by Ruric's side. "That is one of his chief points when engaged in an affair of this kind. He hopes to get you angry, and so unstring your nerves."

"Never fear," returned the gun-maker. "Be sure he only brings new danger to himself, for such efforts will find their point in the muscle of my arm."

The party halted when they reached the interior of the rough structure, and the Count threw off his pelisse and drew his sword. Ruric followed his example.

"Sir Count," the latter said, as he moved step forward, "we will commence this work I wish to accomplish to understand distinctly what I stand. You have sought this quarrel from the first. Without the least provocation from me you have insulted me most grossly, and this is the climax. So, before God and man, be the result upon our own heads."

"Out, lying knave!"

"Hold!" cried the surgeon, laying his hand heavily upon the Count's arm. "You have no right to speak thus, for you lower yourself to do it. If you have come to fight, do so honorably."

An angry reply was upon Damoff's lips, but he did not speak it. He turned to his antagonist and said:

"Will you measure weapons, sir? Mine may be a mite the longest. I seek no advantage; and I have one here of the same length and weight as my own if you wish it."

"I am well satisfied as it is," replied Ruric.

"Then take your ground. Are you ready?"

"I am!"

The two swords were crossed in an instant, with a clear, sharp clang.

There was some contrast between the two swords, but not much apparently. The Count was a little the taller and Ruric was somewhat heavier. But to a closer observer there was a peculiar contrast in the bearing of the two men. That breast swelling out so nobly, and those massive shoulders, made for the seat of physical power, were Ruric's alone to possess. Yet Conrad Damoff was accounted a strong man. In the athletic sports of the club he had few superiors, and not many equals. But Ruric Nevel had never shown his strength there.

Now, for the first time, that contemptuous look passed from the Count's face. As his eye caught his antagonist's position—as he noticed the calm, dignified, quiet ease of every limb; and as he caught the deep, mystic fire of those expressive eyes, he knew that he had no common amateur to deal with.

At length Conrad Damoff started back, and a quick cry escaped his lips. His antagonist's point had touched his bosom—it had pressed against his heart, and had not been driven home. Well he knew that his life was his no longer, for the gun-maker had gained it, and—spared it.

"You fence well," he gasped, struggling to regain his composure.

"You are no novice," returned Ruric calmly, at the same time allowing his point to drop.

"Come on," the Count uttered, now gathering all his energies for another effort.

And again the weapons were crossed. This time Damoff was more guarded. Before he had been impelled by his own assurance; but now he was forced to regard his opponent's power. Ruric quickly found that the other was more careful than at first, and he carried his own point accordingly.

At the twelfth stroke the Count made a feint to the left—then at the throat, and then, with a quick, lightning-like motion, he brought his point to his antagonist's heart. But his meaning had been read from the first by Ruric. The youth caught the motion of the eye, and he saw that his heart was the place looked to. His own movement was almost instinctive. He received his antagonist's sword midway upon his own blade—then moved his arm quickly forward and caught the point under his cross-guard—then, with all his power, he wrenched his arm upward and backward, and the Count's sword went flying across the ceiling. It struck the opposite wall with a dull clang, and the next instant it was half buried in the snow.

"Fear not, sir," said Ruric, as the Count started back with both hands raised, "I never strike an unarmed man."

Damoff's arms fell to his side, and a deep blush of shame mantled his face.

"By St. Paul," cried the surgeon, "your life is forfeited, sir Count; and now you shall be satisfied."

"No, no," the discomfited man exclaimed, starting up with rage and mortification.

"That was but a slip. 'Twas a false stroke—a cowardly feint. I am not overcome."

"Eh, man of mortality, even now your life is Nevel's. He may run you through now if he chooses."

"But he has not," the Count cried, springing to where his sword had fallen, and snatching it up.

"Sir Count," he spoke Ruric calmly, but with a marked contempt, "you should not blame me for what I have done, for thrice have you tried to break my sword."

"Then try it again," Damoff returned.

"Forbears not," our hero retorted. "But be sure your sword shall be used no more after this day."

"Ha! bring not, but strike. If you can—"

The conclusion of the sentence was drawn by the clash of steel.

At the second stroke the Count made another furious thrust at his antagonist's heart. Ruric sprang quickly aside, and with the whole power of his good right arm he struck Damoff's blade close to the hilt and broke it in twain.

"My other sword! my other sword!" the Count shouted, now blinded by absolute madness. "Oh, give me my other—"

"Hold!" cried both the surgeon and Stephen Oras in concert. "You are mad, Count."

"Mad—I! Shall I be mad! Where is my sword?"

"Away, I say! Shall I give up because my sword is broke?" By the gods, the weapon deceived me. Where is the other?"

"Deceived thee, Conrad?" repeated the surgeon, sarcastically. "By the holy Host! had thy head but received a hundredth part of the blow, 'twould not be spent on thy shoulders now."

But the Count was beyond all reason. In his madness he saw not that his sword had been broken on purpose. He did not see that he had been at his antagonist's mercy. But his friends save it all.

"'Tis I! whom have we here?" cried Alaric, whose eye had caught a dark form at the entrance of the building.

"I am Alaric the monk."

"How now? What seest ye here?" asked Urzor, as the fat, burly waddled towards the party.

"I heard the clash of arms, my son; as I rode by, and I stopped to see what it was. Surely, where the work of death is going on, a child of the holy church of God may come."

"Aye—" cried the Count, "Come in and welcome, but meddle not. Now—my sword—is it?"

Robustly Urzor brought forward the second, but ere he gave it up he said:

"Beware, Conrad. You had better—"

"Pace, babbler!" the excited fool hissed, smacking the weapon, and then turning quickly upon the gun-maker.

Thus far Ruric had remained silent, but he felt it due to speak.

"Sir Count," he said, in a tone so stern and authoritative, and with a look so commanding, that the other was held in abeyance by it. "I must speak on my word."

"I heard—no, I saw—such a man as he was," said Urzor, as he pointed his sword with a hand that trembled.

"I do not think this warrior is mortal," the surgeon reported, as he carefully felt his way along the course the steel had taken. "It has passed below the right lung, and only severed some of the smaller blood-vessels."

"I think he is dead," said Urzor.

"But why so anxious?" asked Urzor.

"You were ready enough to accept his challenge."

"Aye—else you would have called me coward," returned the gun-maker with a flitting eye. "Had I refused to meet him that fatal word would have met me at every turn. I knew that such a man as he was no cope for me at any game where strength of arm and strength of hand were required. So I meant to disarm him, and then give up his life, believing that such a move would be the combat. You know how I labored to speak him down, and how I fought him—

RESPONSES TO TOASTS.

SOME OF THE DIFFICULTIES OF SPEECH-MAKING.

A Post-Prandial Orator Who, Unlike Chaucer Depew, Labors for Months to Prepare a Five-Minute Discourse—
He Gets Ideas.

The pleasant sensations of the condeemed who knows that he is to be hanged when a month's time has elapsed are not unknown. A store of linen brings: "I've got 'em again. No, not smock; never had 'em, though I've had many. But, unfortunately, I am not to be hanged to-morrow. What I am to do is this: I am to respond to a toast at a banquet. I have no idea what it is, nor if it were not for the disgrace I would prefer being dead."

This toast business is simple enough for most people, but I am not built that way. I am.

I think the last time that I responded to a formal toast was at the banquet tendered to Dr. Simon Quinlan after his return from the mucky muckiness of all the evil bent in the United States. I do not myself proud on that occasion, and regretted it ever since.

The toastmaster, a fellow who told me he was the gentlest of men, was not considered good form to spring an oration at a gay and festive banquet. Yet for days I labored with that speech and labored under the impression that it was excruciatingly funny—full of killed humor, ugly, to my eye. It fairly sparkled with wit, though so few of us there have been provided with mirrors, fire-irons, and glass escapist. Yet it fell flatter than a stone of Coney Island beer in May. Still I believed that my speech bubbled over with fun and finely rounded with wit. Every where I roamed that toast was a response at home it bubbled over to that extent that it became the talk of the floor and spoiled the eating of the room below mine. Indeed, to insure success, I sent up to A. T. messenger boys and tried it on them at the rate of 40 cents an hour.

It was a success, and I shall always remember with feelings of gratitude my friends at the reporters' table, at the banquet, for treating my speech so leniently as they did. In the papers the next morning. Two of them kindly attributed it to my perambulatory state, while another regretted that I should have given such a bad example of paraplegic condition of paraplegic.

One hinted at softening of the brain, considerately applying for that simple Latin motto, which I now forget.

There was also a delicate allusion to mental parlance.

The whole trouble arises from the fact that we can not always choose our own virtues.

The assertion of virtues that I now possess is of the acquired kind, like a fondness for caviare, with whipped cream. Next Saturday night I am again to be hanged to-morrow. Only I won't be hanged outright—it will be linging—just a little chink is to be chopped off at a time.

It happens that I am an honorary member of the Shilloh's Club, a swell organization made up of ex-coal barons, real men, brewers, inmates of gas trusts and the like. They meet to discuss their affairs, and when they meet—out-side of business hours and don't play, a moment of mutual sympathy.

Temporary aberration I promised to respond to a toast at their annual banquet next Saturday, and ever since I have suffered the tortures of the mild-damned. A couple of them have been invited and will participate in my confusion.

That toast lies heavily on my mind. There is no butter on that toast for me. There is not a drop of cream for it to float in—no milk for it to mix with. It is brittle, too rough and charred ex-well-cooked.

Sheepishness has fallen on me. I am afraid to meet to-morrow. The noble hearts that once knew, Who sleep beneath the wave,

Bethold the 'tis a sudden sight, Mark that rough seaman there;

Whose hard, right hand, the first in sight; Now wipes away a tear.

With choking voice he tries to tell, And nature's weakness hide,

How Edward, bravely fighting fit, How gallantly he died.

See at his widow mother's side, And Edward's stand;

She is poor Edward, hapless brile, His orphan holds his hand.

So in life's chequered web we find, Small threads of silver, bright,

For good with evil is combined: All is not dark as night.

Who knows where precious gems may rest, What wealth the barren rock may hide,

Does not the mountain's rugged breast, Yield the pure sparkling crystal tide?

Thus as that rugged form we view, We never could suppose,

That one gentle genius knew, Of others woes.

Strive not the gift to hide, Brush not that tear away,

No gem which decks a monarch's pride Shines with so pure a ray.

It cannot waste, an angel bright, Hail caught the priceless gem;

In Heaven twill shine with starry light, From pity's diadem.

In our hearts strange thoughts lie hidden They sleep within some secret cell, Arouse, how oft they rise unbidden, And o'er our actions cast a spell.

For good with ill, is eye combined, Of joy with sorrow, of pain with woe,

If joy doth spread thereof we find, Its sorrow weaves the woe,

Thus Scotland's hills upon the scene, Cold look rugged too,

But in the smiling vale between, Dwell hearts as kind, as true.

From the first boat to reach the shore, Urged by love's willing hand,

For love's sake labored at the oar, Young lady, hasted to land,

Kind was the greeting of his friends, His course with rapid footstep bends,

To seek his love's abode,

En as the arrow's rapid flight, William pushed swiftly on,

WILLIAM AND MAGGIE.

A TALE OF BARBADOS—A STORY OF THE BUGGARIES, 1670.

Rushing out of its pebbled bed, Cognac's sparkling waters rose, With flowers here and there shed. Verdures desks the shining shore.

Crowded with many a scarlet flower, The immobile waves over head; Bahama here to form a bower Alot their feathered foliage spread.

'Tis here young Maggie, day by day, A store of linen brings; I've got 'em again. No, not smock; never had 'em, though I've had many.

The dashing waters sparkle bright, Beneath the sun's rays. They gladden with half the light, Which beams from Maggie's eye.

Her voice's cadence clear and sweet, Charms all who pass that way;

They pause and every kindly greet,

The maiden's cheerful lay.

But her gentle heart can't bear,

The man she loves will broach his love,

And plead—but plead in vain.

Oh! was it that her heart was cold,

As Cognac a rushing stream;

Or was it only bent on gold,

And wealth its only dream?

Oh! no, oh! no, her heart was true,

To love's pure ardent flame,

One lord above her young heart knew,

And William was his name.

Upon the spot for a' traced,

The form in which love was,

Maggie's would broach his love,

And plead—but plead in vain.

Oh! was it that her heart was cold,

Oh! was it that her heart was cold,

As Cognac a rushing stream;

Or was it only bent on gold,

And wealth its only dream?

Oh! no, oh! no, her heart was true,

To love's pure ardent flame,

One lord above her young heart knew,

And William was his name.

Upon the spot for a' traced,

The form in which love was,

Maggie's would broach his love,

And plead—but plead in vain.

OPENING OF THE U. E. L. MEMORIAL CHURCH, ADOLPHUSTOWN.*CYLCLING AND HEALTH.

The Bow-Legged Cyclist and his Other Dangers.

Dr. B. W. Richardson, in The Asclepiad, points out that unless certain essential conditions are observed cycling is inevitably injurious to health.

He thinks that it is always best to delay the commencement of cycling until the body is closely approaching the stage of maturity. Even adult cyclists who are too much in the saddle almost invariably acquire what may be called the "cyclist's figure," which is not graceful and is not induced by the physical possession of perfectly balanced bodily powers. Hence I should not recommend cycling as a pastime of the schools, and I should not favor it as an exercise even during holiday times from school, or in the months of summer vacation. The systematic pursuit of cycling should never be fully commenced until the rider has arrived at maturity—that is to say, until the age of 15 years has been attained.

The effect of cycling on the power of extension of the arm and forearm is to slightly bend the limb, the dorsum taking place in the elbow and in the fingers, and to bring down an unnatural curve of the shoulders.
On the other hand, cycling develops the shoulders and the spine. Spine, however, as it does in walking and running, is not usually felt the effect of it more distinctly.

ON WINDOW-GARDENING.

HOW A BOX MAY BE PREPARED WHICH WILL LOOK ELEGANT.

Sells for House-Plants, and How They Are to Be Secured and Mixed to Get the Best Results—Flowers That Bloom in the Spring and in Other Seasons.

N IN MAKING ready your boxes for window-gardening, says Mrs. Hartley, you will need, if you can get them, a carpenter or their construction, but you will first endeavor to obtain some old furniture, such as the exquisite number of boxes which have contained spring flowers. These are generally well built of material, about 4 feet long, 9 inches deep, and 8 wide, and sell for 15 or 20 cents each.

If you are a man who can drive a nail and turn a screw-driver, you can build them for you at a slight expense of inch-thick pine, which may be planed only on one side instead of two, and then sanded against planing. An inner lining of pine, although not a necessity, is sometimes added, and can be made by any tinsmith and secured in place by a few tacks. The greatest desideratum is strength; otherwise an unsightly warping and bulging will ensue on account of the weight of the earth and the exposure to the weather.

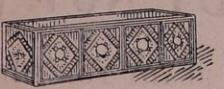

You may do just as much of the whitewashed business as your fancy may suggest and your time will allow, according to the cost of the lumber. If you are fond of a finishing touch, you will have a "fetching" way with you, provide with bits and odds and ends of cloth with which you may tape your box until the pins by will not guess but that it is fellow to the one in Mrs. Loft's a which choose soft back grounds of cream, wood colors or gray, with the tile patterns now so much in vogue. You will want the panel for each end and three or four for the front. Next the order is to have the molding factory make up the panels, where for the usual cost of 2 cents per foot you will get a quantity of half inch molding. Strips of this must be secured vertically between each panel with long, headed brads. Put a strip of the same or of half inch molding along the top and bottom. Oils some molding, and your boxes will show no slightest trace of their plebian origin.

Another way is to panel them without molding, as above, and paint the spaces in harmonizing tints of pale pink, soft gray, and creamy brown. Two coats of this paint and one of varnish.

As you may retain the box a dark color, and then tack on the ends and one side of the quaint, gabled, far-reaching gnomelike roofs of the laurel which abounds in the New Jersey woods, and the cities and towns, so you will find in every part of your country of the mushroomed little staves. Give the whole a coat of stain, and when this dries a coat of varnish. The simplest way is to take a molding top and bottom of a plain pine box, and give two coats of stain and one of varnish. For mere outside window gardening this is as effective as any, since you may confidently hope to see nothing but a mass of vines and gay nasturtium bloom after the plants are once fairly started. If, however, as is quite likely, you want to use these same boxes inside next winter, the ornamentation will then be pleasing.

The soil used by gardeners is a mixture of two-thirds well-rotted and one-third well-rotted stable manure, thoroughly worked and sifted through a fine sieve. The end to be striven for is a soil which shall combine richness, freshness and "friability." Old garden soil will not do. Leaf mold from the woods, mixed with fresh field loam and well-rotted stable manure or sphagnum from the pavements mixed in equal bulk with the good fresh soil, will bring the required soil in which all plants will grow vigorously.

Having got your soil by "hook or by crook," that is to say by your own exertions or by your reliance upon a florist, here a few holes in the ground to plant your seeds and water them with care about the roots and stems. Put in a layer of broken pots, charcoal or broken oyster shells, with the largest pieces at the bottom, and over this a wad of excelsior or sphagnum to keep the soil from washing into the drainage and soaking up the water.

Use the best selection of choice plants, as well as window boxes, their disposal. Sunny windows strong, vigorous plants must be chosen. Use all the artistic taste with which heaven has endowed you in the arrangement of colors, and by what we shall have to grow you will have a mad wealth of bright bloom there shall be no startling incongruity.

For your upright plants you must consider blood and foliage. Of the four ones of the most striking, the petunia is small for the petunia. You can't rock it out but beware of choosing varieties recklessly. Fight shy of magenta petunias. They would breed discord and dissension in the best regulated family of window plants. There one sphere is a grassy lawn. The pretty Countess

Floating Island.

Sandwedge Lake, a large-sized pond in Whitington, Vt., has one of the most remarkable islands in the world within its borders. The island is larger than any farm in the neighborhood, containing over one thousand acres of land. It is a great fact, the fact that it daily shifts its position, being first on the north, then on the south and again on the east or west borders of the lake. It is known as "The Floating Island." It was a long time ago that the first settlers came to the island, so long a time out of memory. It has many trees upon its surface, some of which are from 20 to 30 feet in height, besides an immense thickets of cranberry bushes. It is a great fact that the soil of the island is very poor, and its stability has made it a favorite resort for picknickers and others seeking an outing. Holes have been cut through the crum and fish caught, much after the fashion of catching them through the ice in Winter time.—St. Louis Republic.

Feminine Fire Fighters.

It hasn't been for the petticoats South Bend would have been in ashes and rubble in some tiny town. When that big steel tower over the roof of the firehouse on "the hill" nobody minded it. Its crew of fire swept on towards the town, however, and soon ashes, cinders and smoke were in the streets of the town and men flocked to the firehouse in the presence and terror of the flames was inspiring, especially when carpet rugs and domestic utensils were pressed into the service of the brigade. The fight was long and the favor of the gods was with them. The firehouse was saved for a second continental—Lewiston Journal.

possible a number of the Master Christina, which is a hybrid of the General Grant with the Christina and produces very large clumps of flowers. The golden leaves and the gold and silver leaved geraniums are brightest when the heat of summer is greatest and add beauty and variety of flowers to their attractive foliage.

Horse Breeding in Canada.

Good live stock or any article of commerce which requires the services of a person will command the highest price. It is particularly true in horse breeding. He who can produce first-class carriage horses has no difficulty in disposing of them at satisfactory prices. In like manner, he who can obtain the eye of a connoisseur can obtain nearly any money he chooses to ask. Larger prices will be paid for such horses than for any reach the breeding, however, since he must not only have the usual qualities highly developed in himself, but must have been bred for generations for this purpose, and in this case the English Thoroughbred, Coach horse, and the like, are the breeds best suited to give the best results. These horses have plenty of size and are the popular color, but many of them are as heavily muscled in their thighs and forearms as we would wish, but they have the right amount of bone, power, and plenty of style in the head and neck, which is difficult to obtain in certain breeds of this class. By coupling these horses with the best bred mares, the cross will be one that will be sure to come in the future, which should be taken into consideration when buying a horse.

The greatest desideratum is strength, otherwise an unsightly warping and bulging will ensue on account of the weight of the earth and the exposure to the weather.

Ending of the War.

As we lay facing the rebel lines around Petersburg that last winter of the war the men in the rifle pits preferred to die rather than yield, when ordered to do so, and some even committed suicide. One night I was in a pit about half a mile from what is known as the "crater," and I soon found that there was a "Johnny" in a pit facing me and only a stone's throw away. Everything was quiet that neighborhood, and I never seen in the pit about an hour, when he called out:

"Say, Yank, what about this hairy wah?"

"What do you mean?"

"When are you 'uns gwyne to quit?"

"When you are licked out of your body."

"Show me you can't do it in a hundred years."

"Well, we are going to keep trying."

"He was quiet for a few minutes and said:

"Say, Yank, this is an awful wah."

"Yes."

"Heaps o' good men killed."

"Yes."

"Heaps o' property gwine to wreck."

"Yes."

"Does you uns lay it to me?"

"Well, you are helping to keep the war going."

"And I hadn't orter?"

"Of course not."

"And if I should come over to you uns it might end this fusing?"

"Well, you would have."

"Well, you are helping that way to me. Pears to be a sort o' duty. If I kin stop this bloodshed won't do it then I'm onsy mean, ha'n't I?"

"You are."

"Haven't got no true spirit in me, eh?"

"Then I guess I'll come. I'm aheadin' right fur yur, and you do be careful that your gun don't go off."

He came to my pit, bringing his gun along, and I told him to lay the rear be seen and heard to the world. We made a bold and singular glint of it. Reckon you General Grant will be surprised when he wakes up in the mawin' an' finds the rebellion all pattered out and ma-eating Yankees hard tack!"—N. Y. Sun.

Bound to Pick a Quarrel

A gentleman was known by his acquaintances to have certain infirmities of temper, which had to be endured by his family. On the first of January he was sent to a hospital at breakfast, the next morning, to be sent to bed. Mr. X. had not slept well, and all his British blood was aroused. He found fault with everything, and declared there was nothing on the table fit to eat. After one thing and another had been sent away Mrs. X. had dinner sent to her, but she had not eaten it previous and boiled to suit her husband, put before him. He looked at her crossly a moment, then took up one and broke it.

"How often have I told you my dear," he said, "not to eat anything but endearing, "that I don't want eggs for August! Do you know all right?"

"Well," the wife asked, "what if it is light colored? It is perfectly fresh."

"Fresh!" his husband retorted angrily;

"that's nothing." Its light color shows that there is no good in it. It stands to reason that in a severe weather hen gets debilitated and lay debilitated eggs. If you really cared what I have to eat you would have thought of that."

His Revised Wishes.

A man who had been in America the other morning to find himself surrounded by three large dogs, each one of which seemed perfectly willing to take hold of him, and as he stood there in anxious frame of mind a woman opened the door and asked:

"Want anything?"

"Yes, eggs."

"Victuals or clothes?"

"Buy me one, I am am."

"Exactly aman, but circumstances have worked a grave and important change in my wants. I think my present suit will last me for the next five years, and I don't care if I don't have anything to eat for a month to come. I will only be so kind as to

The Victim of Circumstances.

"I would work, mun, only I met with a fatal disappointment in early life."

"Poor man, you don't look up if you'd got it yet."

"I'm not mun. I always felt I was cut out for something great. But as soon as I learned that Columbus had gone ahead of me in discovering America I lost ambition and went. After a while I found that same was true of the rest of us. I left home and kept getting the Presidency. So it drove me to getting. But I'm on the lookout, now, and my time will come."

The victim of his circumstances took the first old fashioned road to success. His poverty after poverty led him to fighting and the station house. Philadelphia Times.

Before and After.

She (before marriage)—"And you are going to take me to the masquerade?"

He—"Yes sweetest."

"Sweetest, where should I go in?"

He—"In that of Aurora, goddess of the morning, and I will go as Apollo."

She (after marriage)—"Are you going to take me to the masquerade with you?"

He—"I'm going to."

She—"What character should I go?"

He—"Let me see, I guess Mrs. Cradle would suit you best."

She—"It is necessary that one should appear in the costume, and it does not appropriate to the disposition of the wearer."

He (with a chuckle)—"Certainly."

She (sweetly)—"Then, of course, you will go as Mephistopheles."—Boston Courier.
